Beekeeping Continues to Gain Hobbyists

By Nathan Gregory
MSU Extension Servic

The number of people in Mississippi taking up beekeeping as a hobby is growing, and commercial-scale production is holding steady--for now.

"Resident beekeepers in Mississippi are holding their own, despite facing several short- and long-term challenges," said Jeff Harris, bee specialist with the Mississippi State University Extension Service. "What is sobering is that we're struggling to recruit young people into the industry. If that keeps up, there will be no one to replace our current producers when they retire."

While it is considered a small commodity, honey maintains a strong interest among consumers, some of whom become hobbyists. Harris estimates around 900 enthusiasts fall under this category in Mississippi.

Thirty-five to 50 Mississippi families are commercial beekeepers, who manage 3,000-4,000 colonies a year and average 90-110 pounds of honey per harvest.

Another factor is the willingness of "sideliners" to join the industry full time. These producers are the 80-100 beekeepers in the state who rely on honey production as supplemental but not sole income.

"It's amazing the number of people who just want three colonies in their back yard," he said. "That number has exploded over the last decade, and I don't think that will drop off any time soon."

Michael Scheel, president of the Mississippi Beekeepers Association, also believes amateur apiculture is alive and well.

"There's still a large amount of enthusiasm and interest from the consuming population as a whole concerning honey bees and pollinators," Scheel said. "From that, we're seeing more new beekeepers at the hobbyist level."

Perennial pest and health issues affect a beekeeper's bottom line. First detected in the U.S. in the late 1980s, the varroa mite is the largest threat to honey bee colonies. Beekeepers have struggled to stay a step ahead of these parasites and keep them from becoming resistant to treatments.

"Colony mortality rates are declining, and we have made progress in mitigating varroa damage, but we still have a long way to go," Harris said. "Our industry is too small to support the kind of research and development big companies devote to row crops, so in the past we've had to use chemicals that have been used for other purposes for varroa mites."

Harris said a positive development in the commercial industry is the increased use of "soft chemicals" that do not leave behind contaminating residues in wax the way pyrethroids and organophosphates do. These chemicals include organic acids and natural insecticides, such as thymol.

Scheel said hobbyists should be vigilant in controlling varroa mites.

"Some small-scale beekeepers are hesitant to use chemicals to control varroa mite populations," he said. "Failing to address varroa numbers in a timely fashion can cause significant losses."

Hobbyists often use nonchemical options for the control of mites that are too expensive for use on a commercial scale.

"These techniques either trap the mites so that they can be removed and killed or prevent bee colonies from growing very large," Harris said. "Big colonies make more mites; small colonies grow fewer mites. Small colonies also make much less honey. This tradeoff may be agreeable to hobbyists, but commercial beekeepers need to maximize honey production to earn a living."

Primary sources of honey for beekeepers include many native ground-covering plants, shrubs and trees that bloom heavily in the spring. Additionally, some introduced weed species like privet can be a major source of honey. Many other introduced flowering plants like clovers and agricultural crops can be significant sources of honey and pollen to honey bees.

Another potential threat to commercial beekeeping has been temporarily halted for a review by the Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service. It involves the proposed biological control of the Chinese tallow tree.

More than half of commercial honey in the state originates from this tree because of the amount of nectar its blooms produce. However, Chinese tallow is a nonnative, invasive species that compromises crop, pastureland and many natural ecosystems such as marshes and swamps.

"The USDA wants to introduce a species of flea beetle in these areas that attacks tallow seedlings to keep populations from spreading, but commercial beekeepers rely on tallows heavily," Harris said. "Many commercial hives produce honey from these plants when they bloom in the spring before they are moved on to soybeans and cotton plants in the summer."

Harris added that commercial beekeepers fear loss of half of their honey if the trees are eliminated.

"They also fear the possibility of the flea beetle changing its host preference to some of our native trees that are also important sources of honey and pollen for bees," he said. "A decision on the proposed release of the beetles is expected this year."

Honey – Nature's Sweetener

Honey Coconut Breeze

Honey, for glass rim
Toasted coconut, for glass rim
1/2 cup honey lime syrup
1/2 cup plain coconut water
2 tablespoons freshly squeezed lime juice
Ice cubes
Sparkling water, cold

Brush honey around rim of glass and dip coated rim in toasted coconut; set aside. In a cocktail shaker, combine the honey lime syrup, coconut water and lime juice. Shake well, and then serve over ice in coconut rimmed glass, adding a splash of sparkling water. Serve immediately. For the honey lime syrup, combine equal parts honey, water and fresh squeezed lime juice in a saucepan; heat and stir until combined. Cool completely before using. Leftover syrup may be stored, covered, in the refrigerator for seven days.

Honey Charred Cauliflower with Smoked Spanish Paprika

3 tablespoons olive oil
1 teaspoon sea salt
1/2 teaspoon red pepper flakes
1/2 teaspoon Spanish smoked paprika
1 pound cauliflower florets, cut into bite size pieces
2 tablespoons water
3 tablespoons honey
1/2 orange, juiced
Salt and pepper

Heat a 12-inch sauté pan with olive oil and add sea salt, red pepper flakes and Spanish paprika. Lay cauliflower in one layer on the bottom of the pan. Cook over medium high heat to char cauliflower, approximately three minutes. Flip each piece and cook for an additional three minutes. Add water, honey and orange juice and stir to coat. Cover for one minute. Remove lid and finish cooking over high heat for two to three minutes to reduce liquid. Season with salt and pepper.

Pear with Prosciutto, Blue Cheese and Honey

2 pears, cored and cut into 8 wedges
16 thin slices of prosciutto
5 ounces blue cheese
1/4 cup honey

Place prosciutto slice on flat surface and then place pear wedge in the middle. Sprinkle each wedge with about two teaspoons of blue cheese and drizzle honey on top. Wrap prosciutto around the pear wedge and serve.

Jalapeno Honey Cheese Sliders

2 tablespoons orange blossom honey (or your favorite)
1/2 cup cream cheese, softened
1/2 cup Colby Jack cheese, grated
1/4 cup scallions, sliced
12 mini sweet-style slider rolls
24 pickled jalapeno sliced rounds

Place the orange blossom honey, cream cheese, Colby Jack cheese and scallions in a mixing bowl; stir with a spoon or spatula to evenly combine. Place mixture in the refrigerator to keep chilled. Slice each roll in half horizontally. Evenly spread the bottom half of each slider roll with approximately one tablespoon of the chilled creamy honey cheese mixture. Top each with two pickled jalapeno sliced rounds. Place the slider roll tops on each. Heat a non-stick sauté pan over medium heat. Lightly spray the pan with vegetable spray. Place the sliders into the pan and cook for approximately two minutes per side or until the honey cheese filling is gooey and the sliders are evenly crispy on both sides. Gently press sliders to flatten as they cook (just like a grilled cheese sandwich).

Crustless Lemon-Honey Cheesecake

1 1/2 cups plain 2% Greek yogurt
1 cup non-fat cream cheese
1 teaspoon vanilla
1/4 cup plus 1 tablespoon honey
3 egg whites (9 tablespoons if using the kind in a carton)
1/4 cup arrowroot starch or cornstarch
1 tablespoon lemon zest
1/4 cup lemon juice

Preheat oven to 350 degrees F. Whisk together yogurt and cream cheese in a large bowl. Add remaining ingredients and mix until ingredients are incorporated. It will look thin and watery but that's the way it should look. Pour mixture into a greased eight inch circle pan (spring form is best). Bake in preheated oven for 40 minutes; remove from oven and chill in the refrigerator overnight, or for at least eight hours. Once the cheesecake is thoroughly chilled, cut it into eight slices and serve. Store any leftovers in the refrigerator.

Interested in learning more about some of the state's non-row crop insect pests, the kind of pests that affect your lawn, landscape, vegetables and home? Bug's Eye View is a free, weekly electronic newsletter produced by the Mississippi State University Extension Service.

It consists of a single photo of an insect/arthropod and 300-500 words of information about that insect. About half the featured creatures will be pests, the other half will be "miniature wildlife." Information on management and control is included for those that are pests.

March 14 Proclaimed as Agriculture Day in State of Mississippi

By Paige Manning
Director of Marketing
and Public Relations - MDAC

Commissioner of Agriculture and Commerce Andy Gipson was joined by Mississippi Farm Bureau Federation President Mike McCormick, Mississippi Senate Agriculture Chairman Billy Hudson and Mississippi House of Representatives Agriculture Chairman Bill Pigott as Governor Phil Bryant signed a proclamation declaring March 14, 2019, as Agriculture Day in the State of Mississippi.

"I appreciate Governor Bryant recognizing the importance of agriculture to our state and encouraging our citizens to also recognize the value of agriculture," said Commissioner Gipson. "Agriculture is the largest industry in Mississippi, contributing nearly $8 billion to the economy annually in farm-gate value of the commodities produced on our 35,200 farms. Farmers and ranchers face many uncertainties and challenges as they work long, hard hours to supply the world with an abundant, safe and affordable food supply."

This designation of March 14 as Agriculture Day in Mississippi coincides with National Agriculture Day. National Ag Day was started in 1973 by the Agriculture Council of America as an effort to encourage every American to understand how food and fiber products are produced, to appreciate the role agriculture plays in providing safe, abundant and affordable products, to value the essential role of agriculture in maintaining a strong economy, and to acknowledge and consider career opportunities in the agriculture, food and fiber industry.

Prescribed Burning Offers Many Benefits

By John D. Kushla
MSU Extension Service

Few folks may realize that Mississippi forests are adapted to periodic, low-intensity fires.

Native Americans used fire to manipulate their surroundings. They wanted open areas for crops and open forests for hunting. Since the last ice age, north Mississippi's shortleaf pine and upland oaks and south Mississippi's longleaf pine evolved with frequent, low-intensity fire.

The Mississippi Prescribed Burning Act of 1992 codified prescribed burning as a property owner right. Liability is limited as long as the landowner follows the guidelines set forth in the law. Principally, prescribed burning should be in the public interest. Other guidelines are in the Mississippi State University Forest and Wildlife Research Center resources bulletin FO351, "Legal Environment for Forestry Prescribed Burning in Mississippi."

So, what uses for prescribed burning are considered in the public interest? First, fuel and hazard reduction are benefits from prescribed burning. Mississippi forests grow profusely with our warm climate, long growing season and fertile soils. Furthermore, periodic prescribed burning replaces the seasonal fires that shaped the evolution of our forests.

Second, using prescribed burning for vegetation management is in the public interest. This use of burning is particularly necessary in pine forest management. Hardwoods often encroach pines in plantations. Consequently, they compete with the pines for sunlight, nutrients and water. If left unchecked without fire, hardwoods would eventually dominate the forest on uplands.

Third, prescribed burning is an excellent way to enhance wildlife habitat, which is in the public interest. Enhancing wildlife habitat with burning is often an objective in thinned pine stands. The increased spacing between trees after thinning allows sunlight to reach the forest floor. However, the accumulated layer of leaves and branches insulates the soil and prevents the germination of the native seed of nutritious forbs that lie dormant in the topsoil. Removing the litter layer with fire allows sunlight to warm the soil, thus initiating germination of this native seed. The plants that grow after a fire are readily available to all wildlife for food and cover.

Finally, prescribed burning is useful in site preparation for regenerating forests. The investment private landowners make to regrow their forest after harvest is considered a benefit to all citizens. Timber is Mississippi's most valuable crop and its second most valuable commodity after poultry. Regeneration is what makes Mississippi forests a renewable resource.

You may have noticed that these public interests align with a forest landowner's goals in using prescribed burning. Forestry is important in Mississippi, and the sound and sustainable management of that forest resource is a benefit to everyone.
