Interesting Facts About Fall-Standard Pumpkins

By Dr. Gary R. Bachman
MSU Extension Service

As we move further into the fall season, I wonder if there is a more fitting and fun fruit than a pumpkin?

Pumpkins have become a major part of any autumnal or Halloween decoration. And who can resist a fresh pumpkin pie? I know I can't!

The standard pumpkin color for fall decorating has always been brilliant orange. But why limit yourself to just orange? Pumpkin colors include bright and bold red, yellow, white, blue and multicolored stripes. I'm even seeing bright-yellow pumpkins this year.

They can be miniature, flattened, necked, smooth, winged and warty. More and more independent garden centers are offering a wide array of decorative pumpkins (and gourds) for autumnal displays.

Besides their aesthetic qualities, there are some interesting facts about pumpkins you may not know.

While there are more than 150 different pumpkin species grown around the world, there primarily are only four species grown for autumn display. These four species have a multitude of selections, according to the University of Illinois Extension, which is my go-to source for pumpkin information.

First are Cucurbita moschata pumpkins, which are generally weight 5 to 10 pounds and often grown for processing. I'll talk more about canned pumpkin in a bit.

The Cucurbita mixta species shows tolerance for growing in the Southeast, which is good news for growers and pie bakers in Mississippi.

Cucurbita pepo pumpkins are used for carving scary faces and decorating. This species also includes summer squash and zucchini. Have you ever thought of carving that huge zucchini that didn't get picked in time?

Last is Cucurbita maxima, which includes pumpkins grown for size like the ones entered in giant pumpkin contests.

The top six pumpkin-producing states are Illinois, Michigan, New York, Pennsylvania and California, each of which have at least 90,000 acres in production, according to the Ag Marketing Resource Center. There are many small, specialty pumpkin growers in most states.

I promised more on canned pumpkins earlier. When I lived in Illinois, I was amazed at the amount of processing pumpkins being grown there. In fact, Illinois grows more than 95% of the nation's processing pumpkins.

Processing pumpkins are tough and aren't picked by hand. Most growers use mechanical harvesters resembling bulldozers that quickly move through the production fields pushing the pumpkins.

In Morton, Illinois, the self-proclaimed Pumpkin Capital of the World, there is an event called Pumpkin Chuckin', where various catapults and cannons shoot 10-pound pumpkins for distance. To me, most amazing was the Aludium Q36 Pumpkin Modulator air cannon that can shoot a pumpkin up to a mile.

Canned pumpkin is an essential ingredient for making any pumpkin pastry, including pumpkin pie. But unless the can says 100% pumpkin, it's likely a mixture of various pumpkin-like squash that have shorter fibers than many pumpkins, resulting in a smoother product.

A Bachman family favorite are homemade, roasted pumpkin seeds.

After carving your scary jack-o-lantern, save and thoroughly wash away the stringy tissue from the seeds. It doesn't matter the type of pumpkin you use, as the seeds of all pumpkins are edible.

Toss the cleaned seeds with melted real butter -- this recipe does not work with any make-believe butter substitutes -- sprinkle with sea salt and bake at 300 degrees. Keep a close watch until the seeds are slightly toasty in color.

It will be hard to do this, but let the seeds cool before you enjoy them.

Mississippi State Fairgrounds Serves as Emergency Response Staging Area

By Andy Gipson
Commissioner of Agriculture and Commerce

When the City of Jackson's water system faced a near total collapse following a month of boil water notices, the State of Mississippi stepped in to resolve the crisis. At the Mississippi State Fairgrounds, we were prepared to handle the needs of our visitors and animals, and we were prepared to assist the State in keeping its facilities running as well as serve the people of Jackson.

The February 2021 ice storm caused problems across the state, and the City of Jackson's water system was not resilient enough to handle the challenge. Much of the city lost water, including the Mississippi State Fairgrounds. With thousands of visitors and thousands of animals on the Fairgrounds for the Dixie National Rodeo, we faced a clear threat to human and animal health. We could not let that happen again.

In less than a year, we drilled a well 740 feet deep into the clear, clean Spartan Aquifer. The water is pumped into our pressurized treatment tank and circulated throughout the Fairgrounds using new piping we installed. We closed off Jackson water to the Fairgrounds, and we are now water self-sufficient on all Fairground properties (except for fire suppression which will still use Jackson water hydrants).

So, we were prepared during this most recent water emergency to fend for ourselves, but also to continue the long tradition of using the Fairgrounds as an emergency response facility to serve Mississippians in need.

On August 30, 2022, a meeting between Michael Lasseter, Executive Director of the Mississippi Fairgrounds Complex and his team met with MEMA and the National Guard to plan for the Fairgrounds emergency water response.

The Fairgrounds served four missions during the crisis. First, it served as one of seven emergency water distribution sites operated by the Mississippi Emergency Management Agency (MEMA) to provide at no charge to the public drinking water and hand sanitizer from 9:00 a.m. until 6:30 p.m. daily. Second, it was the State Staging Area for MEMA and the National Guard to receive and distribute water to all the other distribution sites in the city. Third, we supplied the water from our water system for National Guard tanker trucks to provided non-potable water to those in need across the city (our water was potable, but the tankers were rated non-potable). And finally, we supplied water to tankers for the Department of Finance and Administration to keep state government facility chillers operational for state office buildings. We did the same for the Jackson Medical Mall, the State Health Lab and other critical facilities. In all, we pumped more than 350,000 gallons to serve the community during this emergency.

I want to thank all the state government partners involved in this emergency mission including Governor Tate Reeves and his team, MEMA, the Mississippi National Guard, the Mississippi Forestry Commission, and the Mississippi Department of Public Safety including Capitol Police. I especially applaud our Department of Agriculture staff at the Fairgrounds who took on these additional responsibilities while not missing a beat on other events which continued at the Fairgrounds, including setting up for the Mississippi State Fair. Governor Reeves marshalled the necessary resources to address this crisis and at the Department of Agriculture, we were glad to contribute with our resources, facilities, and staff.

Andy Gipson
Commissioner

Long story short, we hope Jackson's water system continues to improve, but know that when you and your family visit the Mississippi State Fairgrounds, we have clean water to drink for you and your animals. Besides the State Fair and Dixie National Rodeo, we host many events all year long from horse competitions to concerts to trade shows to athletic events to market and shopping opportunities. You can see all the upcoming events at www.msstatefair.com online, or keep your eyes here twice a month in your Mississippi Market Bulletin.

Agritourism Has a Month and It's October!

By Donna West, Division Director
Market Development Division - MDAC

October is just a delightful month. A month filled with energy, expectation and optimism. Shades of red, yellow and orange are everywhere. They greet us in the form of fluttering and floating leaves as we walk through our neighborhood. Hue-laden foliage salute as we travel the roadways. Pumpkins in every shape and tint dot farmers markets, roadside stands and fields. In October, crisp, cool days and nights are ushered in by the diminished air that is no longer burdened with inertia-inducing warm moisture. It's a month bursting of spirit for football, hockey and baseball's World Series. October recognizes that it is reasonable and acceptable to dress in weird and wonderful fashions while asking for tricks or treats. And now, October has welcomed pumpkin picking, hayrides and corn mazes to its calendar of events – that's agritourism y'all, and it has a month, it's October!

So, what is agritourism? Basically, agritourism is a business on a working farm, ranch or any other agricultural enterprise that offers an educational and fun experience for visitors while generating supplemental income for the owner. That is the official definition of agritourism, but it is so much more than that account. Consider the following.

Take a real working farm and those who own the land and work so hard to preserve it. Reflect on what you might find if you were to visit such a farm. A big old red barn? More than likely, yes. Stalks of corn and bales of hay? A definite possibility. Strawberries, blueberries, muscadines, tomatoes and sweet potatoes for as far as the eye can see? What a delicious idea. What about animals? They are always an important cog in the wheel of agriculture. Looking for wagons, trains and tractors? Of course. Fields of flowers, cotton, pumpkins and Christmas trees. How lovely. Maybe a cabin, or a lake or a quaint little general store will be included.

Combine all these expected elements of a working farm, blend them together with the tender loving care of the farmers, add a whole lot of open air, throw in a variety of sounds and aromas and then mix thoroughly. The result of this agricultural fusion is agritourism, of course!

There's the challenge of a corn or hay bale maze, or the chance to grab a bucket and pick your own produce for a delicious meal. Think about a petting zoo with pigs, goats and chickens—oh my! Wagon rides, hayrides and train rides are amusing modes of transportation and an inspired approach to stargazing and bird watching. Horses for riding, cows for milking and bees for honeying are fun and enlightening. Festivals to celebrate peanuts, tomatoes, sweet potatoes, watermelon and catfish are excellent ways to bring a community together. Mix in opportunities for education with hands-on syrup making, goat's milk soap and cheese production. Get yourself in the holiday spirit by visiting the Red Barn Haunted House; pick up a pumpkin for carving and a Christmas tree for trimming. What could be more invigorating than camping, picnicking or hosting a family reunion on a working farm?

Where in the world can all these fun times be found? Right here in Mississippi, of course! Mississippi's rich and colorful agricultural heritage is filled with great innovation and success, and although it remains the leading resource in the state's economy, agriculture constantly changes with time, technology, needs and opportunity. With roughly 34,700 farms in the state covering 10.4 million acres, agriculture makes a significant contribution to all 82 counties in the state.

Another vital component to Mississippi's economic development is the state's travel and tourism industry. Although an estimated 24 million people travel to and around Mississippi each year, its marriage with agriculture is no longer a well-kept secret. By linking these two driving forces in Mississippi's economic development efforts, a very successful partnership has been realized.

Agritourism can benefit local economies by drawing consumers to the community, improving the attractiveness of the region as a tourism destination, providing employment opportunities, and increasing visibility and revenues of local businesses and other retail establishments. Agritourism is now one of the fastest growing tourism markets.

For farmers and landowners, agritourism can be beneficial by promoting product diversification, increasing visibility, increasing demand for products, direct marketing and sales and value-added production.

For adventure, fun and entertainment, as well as a desire to learn more about the history, customs, and culture of Mississippi's working farms, look no further than the Hospitality State's many agritourism operations. The offerings are many and diverse and will leave a lifetime of memories.

Why "Pre-Tag" a Christmas Tree?

By Don Kazery, Jr.
Kazery Christmas Tree Farm

Many Christmas tree growers in Mississippi discover every year that some customers who buy their tree after Thanksgiving have no idea they can "pre-tag" a tree. What does it mean to "pre-tag" your Christmas tree? For many years, many Christmas tree farms have offered the "pre-tag" option.

This means from year to year the Christmas tree farms open one or two weekends before Thanksgiving to allow families to purchase that perfect tree for their home. You shop early for your tree to get the best selection, buy and pay for your tree, and then come back later at a time you prefer to cut or have your tree cut and take it home before Christmas.

Since this service is not offered at every Christmas tree farm, you should check with your local Christmas tree farm beforehand. One prime example of this option this year is the Kazery Christmas Tree Farm. This year, they will offer more than six varieties of tree selections with a range of characteristics from foliage colors and different interesting scents or aromas. Some varieties are limited.

See where your tree is grown, walk around our interesting tree arboretum, start a family tradition, and enjoy one of the best times of the year. When time permits, learn about our tree farm operation and ask questions. Why do deer damage Christmas trees? When is rain harmful on the farm? Ask about steps/process in raising Christmas trees and why it takes so much work.

Buy a fresh Mississippi farm-raised Christmas tree, and pay no state sales tax. There are several Christmas tree farms offering trees in the state. Every farm has many unique features that will make your experience special. Each offers an old-fashioned way to support Mississippi agriculture. It is always good to call and confirm availability and hours of operation. This past year, some farms closed early when they sold out.
