

Pastures, Forages Battle Armyworms

By Linda Breazeale
MSU Ag Communications

Mississippi forage producers are experiencing a major invasion of fall armyworms for the second consecutive year in pastures and hay fields across the state.

Blake Layton, a Mississippi State University Extension Service entomologist, said fall armyworm populations were unusually heavy last year with treatable populations reaching north Mississippi relatively early in the year and eventually extending into Tennessee. In 2010, the southern part of Mississippi needed treatments starting in early June.

"Fall armyworms can cause heavy forage losses, especially in highly managed bermudagrass hay fields," Layton said. "Growers need to check hay fields and pastures regularly.

Armyworms are active mainly at night. They can destroy an entire plant in just one evening, and there may be as many as three generations in one year.

Failure to detect and treat a developing fall armyworm infestation in a timely manner can result in the loss of a cutting of hay or loss of valuable grazing."

Layton explained protecting forage from fall armyworms can require a lot of spraying. Some producers make six or more treatments during heavy fall armyworm years.

"Scout for fall armyworms by vigorously shaking the grass in a one-square-foot area and then carefully counting the larvae that have fallen to the ground. Repeat in several locations in the field, and average your results," he said. "Look carefully for small caterpillars. Treat when counts reach five to seven larvae per square foot."

Layton said there have been significant improvements in the treatment options available in recent years.

"Many of the new products are cheaper, more effective, provide longer residual control, or have more favorable preharvest intervals than the products we have traditionally relied on for fall armyworm control," Layton said.

Rick Simmonds, a producer in Noxubee County, said armyworms have been at near-record levels on his farm.

"We didn't expect to see that many so soon. We had to treat much earlier than normal," Simmonds commented. "They can do a lot of damage very quickly, but sprays are effective if you catch the field in time."

Extension forage and grazing systems specialist Rocky Lemus said the armyworms arrived just as pastures and fields were recovering from the harsh winter.

"We had about a two-week delay in the growing season this spring. The yields from the first hay cuttings were 20 percent to 30 percent below normal," Lemus said. "The winter hurt some bermudagrass fields due to poor fertility, especially low potassium levels, and those with greater losses had to be reseeded or renovated."

Adequate rainfall and warm temperatures have helped most pastures recover. Growers now are turning their attention to weed control and fertilizer needs.

"The best time to use herbicides for weed control in established pasture is during early winter or early spring when weeds are actively growing," Lemus said. "Herbicides will work better and cost less than mowing in most cases when applied at appropriate times."

As the fall approaches and producers begin thinking about cool-season forages, Lemus said armyworms can be a problem in early-planted ryegrass or small grains. The recommended planting dates for winter annuals in southern Mississippi are from early September to late October. In northern Mississippi, winter annuals are sod-seeded in mid-September to late October. Producers can overseed warm-season grasses in the southern part of the state in November.

For more information on forage production, Mississippi cattle producers have until August 17 to register for MSU's pasture and forage short course. The August 24-25 workshop costs $100 per person or $75 each if two or more people from the same farm or organization attend. The fee covers meals, training sessions, the Mississippi Grazing Manual, and other educational materials. The event will be held at MSU's Bost Conference Center.

Program topics include nutrient cycling in pastures, weed management, economics of grazing systems, legume management, hay production and quality, grazing systems, animal nutrition, fencing demonstrations, and sprayer and drill calibrations. The short course will feature demonstrations and a trade show.

Contact Lemus at (662) 325-7718 or rlemus@ext.msstate.edu, or Tammy Scott at (662) 325-2701 for more information. Details are available at <http://msucares.com/crops/forages/shortcourse>.

Spraying must be done early in the morning or late in the afternoon because the larvae come out from under the soil surface to feed during this period.

1/2 cup soft bread crumbs
1 can chopped green chilies – drained
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon pepper
1/2 cup cheddar cheese – shredded

Combine eggs and sour cream in a large bowl; stir in corn and add remaining ingredients except cheddar cheese. Pour mixture into greased 10-inch baking dish. Bake uncovered at 350° for 35 minutes or until knife inserted in center comes out clean. Sprinkle with cheddar cheese and bake 5 more minutes or until cheese has melted. Let stand for 10 minutes before serving. Yield: 6 servings.

TURNIP GREENS & DUMPLINGS

Turnip Greens
Seasonings – to taste
1 cup cornmeal
1/2 cup onion – minced
3/4 cup hot water
1 tablespoon cooking oil
3 tablespoons hot turnip green liquor

Clean, season, and cook turnip greens, using your favorite recipe. Remove turnip greens from pot liquor; bring the liquid back to a boil. Combine cornmeal, onion, oil and 3 tablespoons turnip green liquor with 3/4 cup hot water, mixing until it becomes a stiff dough. Drop cornmeal mixture by teaspoon into boiling turnip green liquor. Cover and cook on low heat for 10-15 minutes; do not remove lid. Gently fold in greens.

SQUASH SUPREME

2 cups yellow squash
2 eggs – beaten
3/4 cup mayonnaise
1 cup cheddar cheese – grated
1/2 onion – chopped
1/2 stick butter
1/2 cup Ritz crackers – crushed

Cook squash until done; drain and mash. Sauté chopped onion in butter until tender. Mix together remaining ingredients except crackers and add onions and squash. Pour mixture into buttered pan and top with cracker crumbs. Preheat oven to 400° and bake squash for 30 minutes.

TABBOULEH

1 cup bulgar – available in organic section of grocery
2 cups boiling water
2 tomatoes – finely chopped
1 large or 2 small cucumbers – finely chopped
1 small onion or 1 bunch scallions – finely chopped
1 cup parsley – finely chopped
3 tablespoons mint leaves – finely chopped
Olive oil
Vinegar

Pour boiling water over bulgar; soak for about 1 hour. Drain well. Add tomatoes, onion, cucumbers, parsley, and mint. Mix well. Prepare an olive oil and vinegar dressing and pour over mixture and stir to blend well.

FRIED CUCUMBERS

Why not? A delicious way to prepare the many cucumbers from the garden!

Cucumber
1 egg - beaten
1/2 cup milk
Salt and pepper to taste
Flour or cornmeal
Vegetable oil

Wash and slice cucumbers. Combine egg and milk. In separate container, mix together enough flour or cornmeal and salt and pepper for coating (I prefer cornmeal). Dip cucumbers in egg and milk mixture. Dredge in flour or cornmeal and fry them in skillet just as you would a fried green tomato. Very tasty!

Backyard Chickens Provide Fun Way To Enjoy Fresh Eggs

By Karen Templeton
MSU Ag Communications

Many people are finding that raising backyard chickens can be an easy way to provide their family fresh eggs, and also to enjoy a rewarding pastime.

"Raising poultry for egg production has become increasingly popular during the last few years," said Danny Thornton, a poultry specialist with the Mississippi State University Extension Service. "With the current economic situation, a lot of people are hoping to save money on food by raising their own birds for egg production."

Thornton said raising a small flock can be relatively simple if owners are willing to put in the work to get started and keep the birds healthy and well-fed. Getting started requires setting up appropriate shelter before the birds arrive.

Backyard flocks should be provided adequate protection from cold or rainy weather and a fenced-in run outside of the coop. (Photo by Kat Lawrence)

"Coops do not need to be elaborate. The shelter should be dry and provide adequate protection from cold or rainy weather," Thornton said. "You should allow about one square foot of floor space per chick and also provide a fenced-in run outside of the coop."

"Letting the birds run loose can potentially expose them to diseases. Keeping them separated from wild birds can limit their exposure to viruses and internal parasites," Thornton said.

"Poultry owners should always follow good biosecurity practices such as keeping equipment clean and disinfected," Thornton added. "It is a good idea to keep a separate pair of boots to wear only when working with your birds. That way, you don't track bird feces into your house or bring unwanted parasites and germs out to your flock."

Thornton said maintaining a flock is not expensive, but owners need to properly feed their birds and provide simple veterinary care.

"Don't skimp on feed. Poultry need to have a balanced corn-and-soybean-based diet with calcium phosphorus," he said. "They don't need extensive veterinary care or vaccinations, but they should always be vaccinated for fowl pox."

Thornton said good feed is reasonably priced and helps provide people with better quality eggs.

There are initial costs with getting started, but backyard bird owner Alicia Barnes of Starkville said the birds can quickly earn their worth.

"The biggest expense was in the shipping costs with the birds we purchased," she said. "Not only are we getting eggs from them, but they also provide free pest control. Chickens will spend their entire day eating pests from the yard. Our birds are saving us on the cost of pesticide."

Barnes researched raising backyard flocks before purchasing her first chick and has found poultry ownership to be manageable.

"Chickens take care of themselves as long as you provide safe shelter.

eat' also applies to animals."

Thornton said chickens can serve as more than just a food source to their owners.

"There is no shortage of good eggs here in Mississippi. With Cal-Maine here in our state, we have access to commercially produced quality eggs," he said. "What I find people enjoy most about these backyard flocks is that they can serve as a great hobby."

Thornton said many retirees across the state enjoy keeping their own birds. Parents find backyard flocks are a good way to teach their children about responsibility.

"It is a good opportunity for children to learn about poultry and the care they need," he said. "Kids can be put in charge of feeding the chickens, cleaning the coop, and collecting eggs."

Chickens range in color and size, some with large, fluffy crests and others with bright red feathers. Some people purchase chickens based on the traits certain breeds have. Some breeds have been described as good layers, while others are said to be protective and maternal.

Barnes enjoys learning about the many breeds and understanding their different personalities.

"I like pretty chickens, not just the plain white fryers," she said. "We have a Silver Winedot and a Buff Orpington mix, and we just received three speckled Sussex chicks, two Partridge Cochins, and three Buff Laced Polish chicks."

Raising chickens has become a labor of love for Barnes.

"My favorite part about keeping chickens is holding them at the end of the day," she said. "When the sun starts setting, they get quiet and still. My adult chicken will go roost on our fence and then I sit her on my lap and pet her as she coos before she puts herself in the coop."

Soybean Crop Looks Good Despite Varying Maturity

By Bonnie Coblentz
MSU Ag Communications

Delayed planting and high summer heat have not kept Mississippi's soybean crop from looking good as of mid-July, though fields ranged from just planted to nearly ready to harvest.

Trey Koger, soybean specialist with the Mississippi State University Extension Service, said the crop was planted a little later than usual statewide, but many acres in northeast Mississippi were not planted until almost July.

"Big rains caused some stand losses, and those fields had to be replanted," Koger said. "Our crop is in a wide array of growth stages, but I think it is a pretty good crop."

The summer's high heat and limited rain caused an excessive number of flowers and fruit to shed, but Koger said most fields have recovered from these losses.

"Soybean plants will shed naturally, regardless of the weather," Koger explained. "We get excessive shedding when temperatures are above 90 degrees, especially with warm nighttime temperature like we had in June."

Parts of the state are getting dry, and continued lack of rain in the northern and central part of the state will soon cause problems for soybeans. Koger said about two-thirds of the state's soybeans are irrigated. Almost all of the irrigated acres are in the Delta, which has not been overly dry this summer.

"The crop endured a lot of stress in June and early July from excessive heat and little rainfall, but it looks pretty good considering that," Koger said. "We're going to have to have some rainfall from here on out for some of the late-planted crop."

and Extension Center in Stoneville, said insect pressure has been low to date.

"We've seen a few insecticide applications for bean leaf beetles, but those were fairly few and far between," Gore said. "Stinkbugs have been lighter than normal all year, but we're starting to get reports of stinkbugs in soybeans from other areas of the mid-South. As the crop moves into pod development, we're going to have to keep an eye on them."

Gore said the late arrival of stinkbugs is probably the result of the cold winter, which killed many overwintering stinkbugs. It took more time this summer for stinkbug numbers to build to damaging levels.

Bollworms are becoming a problem in soybeans. They typically start in corn, then move into cotton and soybeans. This year, the row crops' maturity levels aligned to provide ideal conditions for bollworms.

"We always have problems with bollworms, but it looks like we might have more problems than normal with them this year," Gore said.

While it is much too early to estimate the season's profitability, prices have improved. John Michael Riley, Extension agricultural economist, said soybean's September futures contract was $9.87 per bushel in mid-July. Greenville reported a cash price of $9.66. Soybean futures prices have risen almost 8 percent since July 1.

"The market is coping with news on opposite ends of the spectrum and apparently is latching on to the good news, likely due to the fact that corn prices have been improving," Riley said. "A recent report that China is back in the market for soybeans should bode well for what is expected to be the largest crop on record."
