Soybean Crop Quality, Prices Navigate Volatility

By Nathan Gregory
MSU Extension Service

The condition of Mississippi's soybean crop in early August literally depends on where you stand.

"We have some really good-looking irrigated soybeans that were planted in the optimum planting window and have made it to this point of the season with very few issues, other than extreme heat," said Trent Irby, soybean specialist with the Mississippi State University Extension Service. "We even have some nonirrigated soybeans that could fall into that same description after catching several timely rains."

"Change to a different location,"

he added, "and we have some irrigated soybeans that are way behind because of not being able to be planted early due to wet conditions and some nonirrigated soybeans that haven't caught a rain in weeks."

The U.S. Department of Agriculture reports 2.3 million acres planted of the state's most prodigious crop, up 80,000 acres from 2021. The USDA's weekly crop progress report from July 24 graded 73% of the state's soybean crop as either fair or good, but it graded 18% as poor or worse. The remaining 9% was in excellent condition.

Extreme heat and extended stretches of drought through much of June and July may affect yields.

"The crop cannot be as efficient in either vegetative or reproductive development when daytime and nighttime temperatures stay high. That's not to say that we won't have some solid yields in places, but there will likely be some level of impact to overall yield potential that came from the extra heat this season," Irby said. "Couple the heat with drought, and there could be major yield impacts in those areas."

Irby said heavy spring rains in areas and recent persistent heat coupled with limited, sporadic rainfall kept growers from planting even more acres.

"Portions of the state remained too wet to get anything done until the drought hit in June. Then it went from too wet to too dry to plant in a short period of time," he said. "Of the acres that did shift from other crops, the likely factor was input prices in that crop. Some acres shifted out of corn and into soybean because of high nitrogen fertilizer costs."

The USDA's weekly crop progress report estimates 94% of the state's soybean crop has bloomed, with 81% setting pods. Of the eight soybean reproductive stages, full flowering is known as "R2," while setting pods is the fourth stage, or "R4." Irby said most of the state's acres range from R4 to R6, or full pod.

"We have a limited number of acres beyond R6 that will be ready to harvest soon. We also have a number of late-planted beans that were planted late either due to wet spring weather or planted behind harvested wheat, with these ranging from barely out of the ground up to R2," he said. "We always need timely rain in those fields where we don't have irrigation capability to finish filling pods, but also, we need good harvest conditions to avoid quality issues and get the crop out in a timely manner."

The industry continues to see high volatility in soybean prices as the growing season progresses. November soybean futures averaged $13.37 for the week ending July 24, down 18% from the contract high of $15.82 for the week ending June 9.

"Current prices are 7% higher than where we started the year, but they are 3% lower than a year ago," said MSU Extension agricultural economist Will Maples. "We have seen a November contract high that was 8% higher than the one reached in 2021. This fact displays the price volatility in the market in which higher highs and lower lows are experienced."

"The market downturn soybeans have experienced over the last two months, also experienced by most other commodities, has largely been influenced by the overall economic downturn and talk of recession," he added. "Given the current economic conditions, we have likely already seen the price high for the November contract."

In the July World Agricultural Supply and Demand Estimates report, USDA indicates soybean supplies for 2022 at 4.5 billion bushels, 135 million bushels higher than 2021.

"There is strong demand for U.S. soybeans from both the international export market and domestic crushing," Maples said. "China remains a major buyer of U.S. soybeans. Domestically, the increased demand for soybean oil used in biofuel production is resulting in strong soybean crushing demand."

"Ending stocks for 2022 are currently projected at 230 million bushels, which is considered a price supportive level," he said.

MDAC Advisory on Annual Ryegrass Investigation

By MDAC Staff

Annual Ryegrass is a commonly grown cool season grass in Mississippi. It is widely used for winter grazing in warm season pastures. It is also used as a cover crop and in wildlife plot seed mixes. Approximately 500,000 acres of annual ryegrass are planted in the state each year. Most annual ryegrass comes from the Willamette Valley region of Oregon. Grass seed in this area is grown as a row crop much in the same way as we raise soybeans, corn, and cotton. The conditions in this region are ideal for producing cool season grass seed. In years past, burning of the residue post-harvest prevented most of the contaminants that would occur in the seed produced. However, several years ago most, if not all, the burning has been prohibited. This has allowed annual ryegrass to naturally reseed when the ground is worked. When the seed producers plant a variety of annual ryegrass behind a another, different variety of annual ryegrass instead of rotating between different crops such as wheat, the result is a mixture of annual ryegrass varieties instead of a pure variety.

When new varieties are released, the breeder/owner has the option to file for protection under the Plant Variety Protection Act. This program protects the varietal identity for 20 years. Once the protection has lapsed, the variety may be grown by anyone without the assurance of varietal purity the PVP affords. Most of the varieties of annual ryegrass grown in Mississippi are no longer protected by PVP.

Recently the Mississippi Department of Agriculture and Commerce (MDAC) has received multiple complaints from producers who thought they were buying authentic Marshall Annual Ryegrass last fall and experienced undesirable results. The producers complained that the annual ryegrass did not perform as well as authentic Marshall has done in the past. They reported the plants had similar characteristics that are normally seen in Gulf and Gulf-type varieties, rather than the expected results from authentic Marshall.

Pursuant to its authority under the Mississippi Pure Seed Law, MDAC has opened an investigation and is working closely with the United States Department of Agriculture (USDA) to determine if there was an issue with contamination of the seed in question. MDAC will take action depending on the findings of the investigation.

Cases involving intentionally mislabeling varieties are rare, but they do occur. In May 2021, Oregon Department of Agriculture settled a case involving the mislabeling of 161 lots of Kentucky 31 Tall Fescue. Their investigation found that from 2016-2018 a company had sold approximately eight million pounds of tall fescue which was falsely labeled. Their investigation resulted in a fine of $300,000 and the revocation of the seed permit for the company and person involved.

Andy Gipson

The best protection for consumers is to be diligent when making seed purchases and select reputable varieties the producer has a proven track record with, such as authentic Marshall. Always read the seed label. Beware of deals that seem too good to be true. Also, retain copies of labels, invoices, and, if possible, the empty bags from the seed that is planted. This will aid in any investigation that may arise from poor performance of the seed.

Consumer protection is a critical part of the mission at MDAC. If you become aware of suspect seed or plant issues, please contact the Bureau of Plant Industry at 662-325-3390 so we can initiate a proper investigation.

Discover the Versatility of Soy!

Blueberry Soy Muffins

1 cup soy flour
3 cups all-purpose flour
1 tablespoon baking powder
1/2 teaspoon baking soda
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon cream of tartar
2/3 cup granulated sugar
2/3 cup vegetable shortening
2 tablespoons powdered sugar
1 1/2 cups blueberries, fresh or frozen (do not thaw)
8 egg whites
2 cups orange juice

Preheat oven to 400° F. Spray muffin pans with non-stick cooking spray. In a large bowl, combine flours, baking powder, baking soda, salt, cream of tartar, and granulated sugar. Stir until well blended. With a pastry blender, cut in shortening until evenly distributed. Rinse and drain fresh blueberries, pat to dry. Toss with powdered sugar and set aside. If using frozen blueberries, do not rinse. In a small bowl, beat egg whites and orange juice until blended. Add liquid to dry ingredients, stirring only until moistened. Fold in blueberries. Spoon batter, 1/4 to 1/3 cup per muffin, into prepared pans. Bake at 400° for 20 to 25 minutes. Turn out of pan immediately. Cool right side up on wire rack.

Linguine with Soybeans and Sausage

8 ounces hot or mild Italian sausages, casings removed
1 onion (8 oz.), peeled and chopped
1 clove garlic, peeled and minced
1 cup fat-skimmed chicken broth
1 package (12 oz.) frozen shelled soybeans or 2 1/4 cups refrigerated cooked shelled soybeans
8 ounces dried linguine
3 tablespoons chopped Italian or regular parsley
3 tablespoons grated parmesan cheese
Salt and pepper

Pull sausages into chunks and put in a 10- to 12-inch frying pan over medium-high heat. Add onion and garlic; cook, stirring often to crumble meat, until sausage is browned, 7 to 10 minutes. Add broth and soybeans and bring to a boil; reduce heat to low and simmer, uncovered, stirring occasionally, until beans are hot, 3 to 5 minutes. Meanwhile, in a 5- to 6-quart pan over high heat, bring about 3 quarts water to a boil. Add linguine and stir occasionally until barely tender to bite, 7 to 9 minutes. Drain pasta and return to pan. Add sausage-soybean mixture to linguine and stir over medium heat until hot. Mix in parsley, parmesan cheese, and salt and pepper to taste. Pour into a serving bowl.

Soybean-Cabbage Casserole

1 large cabbage (about 2 pounds), shredded
3 tablespoons of oil
1 tablespoon of soy sauce or tamari
1/2 teaspoon of sugar
1 teaspoon of salt
2 cups of cooked soybeans, ground
1 tablespoon of whole wheat or unbleached white flour
1 egg dash of pepper
1/2 cup of milk butter or margarine

In a large skillet, sauté the cabbage in the oil until it wilts, then add the soy sauce, sugar and half of the salt. Cook this mixture, covered, for another 15 minutes. While that simmers, combine the soybeans, flour, egg, pepper and remaining salt, then gradually stir in the milk. Alternate layers of cabbage and bean mixture, beginning and ending with the cabbage, in a greased two-quart baking dish. Dot the casserole with butter or margarine, and bake it in a 350-degree oven for about an hour.

Bermudagrass Stem Maggot is Fairly New Pest of Pastures

By Bonnie Coblenz
MSU Extension Service

Following last year's significant fall armyworm outbreak, hay producers should be careful not to overlook another important pest -- the Bermudagrass stem maggot -- while watching for armyworms.

While farm armyworms attack hay fields, home lawns, golf courses and more, the non-native Bermudagrass stem maggot is primarily a pest of hay fields.

Blake Layton, an entomologist with the Mississippi State University Extension Service, said the Bermudagrass stem maggot is a relatively new pest, and many growers have not gotten used to dealing with it yet.

"These little flies can stop a field from growing, or more commonly, cause reduced growth and yield, and the damage is easy to overlook until it is too late," Layton said. "Those growing Bermudagrass hay need to learn to recognize Bermudagrass stem maggot damage and make a point of checking fields for damage."

Bermudagrass stem maggots do not significantly damage pastures that are being grazed or turfgrass that is cut regularly.

Adults are small flies, about half the size of a house fly, with yellow abdomens. The legless, white larvae cause damage by boring into the growing shoot tip and killing it. Light infestations often go unnoticed and cause relatively low yield losses, but moderate to heavy infestations can cause yield losses ranging from 30% to a complete loss.

"Damage is restricted to the two or three grass blades at the tip of the growing shoot because the larvae do not feed past the first internode," Layton said. "When viewed from a distance, heavily infested fields look like they have suffered light herbicide injury or experienced a frost."

Heath Steede, Extension agent in George County, said people with pastures have been dealing with Bermudagrass stem maggots for years.

"I've never seen stem maggots be as bad as armyworms can get, and what I've observed is that if somebody sprays their hay fields regularly for armyworms, that seems to help with the stem maggots as well," Steede said.

This pest is not a problem in home yards that are mowed regularly.

Layton said there is a key to dealing with Bermudagrass stem maggot: The decision on whether to spray for the pest usually must be based on the level of infestation experienced in the previous cutting of hay.

"This is vastly different from how treatment decisions are made on most other crops," he said.

Treatment thresholds are not well researched, but if 10-15% of stems in the previous hay cutting were damaged, it is time to treat.

"Pyrethroid insecticides work well on adults, but treatments must be applied shortly after the grass is cut. This means 5 to 7 days after cutting, or as soon as the field begins to green up again," he said.

The goal of treatment is to kill adult flies before they can lay eggs on new grass shoots. In fields with a heavy infestation in the previous cutting, consider making two sprays, about 5 to 7 days apart.

"Infestation levels increase with each cutting if left untreated," Layton said. "If infestations become so heavy that they stop a field from growing, the best response is usually to cut the field and start over, and to apply two well-timed sprays on the next cutting."

"If you get a couple weeks into a growth cycle and begin to notice damage, it is still worth spraying at that point," Layton said.

Master Gardener Program Prepares Fall Trainings

By Nathan Gregory
MSU Extension Service

Dates for the fall 2022 session of the Master Gardener course have been set.

Registration for the asynchronous online seminars will be open from August 15 to September 12. The sessions will be available from October 3 to December 2. Once registration opens, it can be accessed at <http://msuext.ms/mg>.

The Master Gardener Volunteer program is a way to gain horticultural expertise at a low cost, meet fellow gardeners, connect to a local community and belong to a well-respected educational organization. The program is managed by the Mississippi State University Extension Service.

In exchange for 40 hours of educational training, participants must return 40 hours of volunteer service within a year of their training. Each subsequent year requires 20 hours of service and 12 hours of additional training to maintain Master Gardener certification. Volunteer hours should help local Extension offices with horticulture projects that benefit local communities.

The cost for Master Gardening Volunteer training option is $125. A Home Gardening Course, which requires no volunteer community service, is available for $200.

Muscadine Field Day

By Susan Collins-Smith
MSU Extension Service

Individuals interested in muscadine production can attend an upcoming field day dedicated to the fruit.

The 2022 Muscadine Field Day will be held August 25 at the Mississippi State University McNeill Research Unit, a branch of the Mississippi Agricultural and Forestry Experiment Station. Topics include propagation, pruning, insects, diseases and more.

The unit is located at 7 Ben Gill Road in Carriere, directly across from Jack's Fish House.

Registration begins at 8:30 a.m. The program begins at 9 a.m. and concludes at 11 a.m.

The field day is hosted by Mississippi State University and the USDA Agricultural Research Service.
